

Hunting and Narud at Gallery Libby Sellers

"I saw Amy Hunting speak at the W Project dinner and she was fantastic. I'd seen her work a little bit before, but she talked us through the entire process of her project and understanding how much respect she's got for materials was really great. She's got a beautiful relationship with materials and simplicity; she spoke a lot about inverting what people expect from a material or pushing its characteristics really far. A lot of what she does comes from set and exhibition design, so it's great to see that you can take things that have a more commercial context and finesse them until they attain a more exclusive object status. They look almost like satellites, like a hieroglyphic sky dish from the future."
